Morning Workshop:

Not Friend or Family:
Maintaining Healthy
Boundaries in the Helping Professions -

Ethical Considerations & Practical Challenges
9am-12:15pm

Registration begins at 8:30am

PURPOSE

Working in health care and social services often places professionals in the unique position of consumers wanting to treat them like family or friends. Employers, however, want staff to work efficiently and not form personal ties. This can make social workers, nurses, and caregivers feel caught in the middle balancing the different expectations of employers, clients, and their own personal needs while getting work done to everyone's satisfaction. This workshop will discuss the ethical issues involved, and strategies to help establish and maintain appropriate boundaries with senior adults and their families.

(This training meets the Ohio CSWMFT Board ethics training requirement).

Afternoon Workshop:

Battling Burnout & Compassion Fatigue in the Helping Professions - Serving Vulnerable Populations More Effectively 1-4:15pm

Registration begins at 12:30pm

PURPOSE

Those in the helping professions often have high rates of stress that can become chronic and affect their quality of work and personal lives. Research studies focus on describing, comparing, and contrasting the concepts of burnout, compassion fatigue & secondary trauma symptoms for people in the helping professions.

This workshop will address research findings and focus on risk factors for developing one of these conditions. Participants will be encouraged to discuss both preventions and/or treatment strategies in their own situations. The goal of the workshop is to assist professionals to continue to serve vulnerable populations more effectively and on a long-term basis.
